A Step Out with Family and Friends

Due to the coronavirus pandemic, the whole world was confined to the four walls of their homes with activities restricted to a virtual outreach. Work from Home was the new normal, the luxury of well appointed offices was replaced by hastily furnished quarters at peoples homes doubling up as offices during the day and utility spaces during the evenings. Meetings were virtual and even marriages were attended online where the families united on platforms such as Zoom, Teams etc . The major impact was that people had gone into obscurity, anxiety, severe stress due to loss of social interaction . Prior to the out break, people had active get together, social gatherings and were involved in various activities which helped them drive away the stress of work or any other personal issues. The pandemic had made life difficult and challenging, employee – employer relationships, friendships, couples and family relationships were put to severe test. Managing these issues before they grow too big is the need of the hour. With the pandemic abating, everybody is eagerly looking for re–bonding with family and friends and for shaking off the isolation and blues induced by these stressful years. However, with the COVID concern still in mind– the big question would be – where to go.
